Ways of Seeing Abstraction – The PalaisPopulaire showcases abstract art from the Deutsche Bank Collection

The PalaisPopulaire is showing current aspects of international abstract art in Ways of Seeing Abstraction from March 27, 2021, to February 7, 2022. The third exhibition from the Deutsche Bank Collection at the PalaisPopulaire in Berlin includes over 200 works from 1959 to 2021. The exhibition can be visited, if the valid coronavirus measures are adhered as soon as museums and exhibition venues are permitted to open their doors to visitors again.

“Since its revolutionary beginnings at the beginning of the twentieth century, abstract art has flourished repeatedly, defying hostility and bans. Today, in particular, artists and museums are increasingly devoting themselves to this theme,” says Friedhelm Hütte, the head of Deutsche Bank’s global art activities in the Art, Culture & Sports unit and the curator of the current show.

The title Ways of Seeing Abstraction is derived from John Berger’s popular BBC television series and publication Ways of Seeing from the 1970s and, in relation to the exhibition, references the artists’ diverse “ways” of creating non-representational visual worlds as well as the equally diverse ways that viewers can perceive and interpret them individually. In this sense, the selection of artists and works presented is based on the very personal view of the curator Friedhelm Hütte, who has been responsible for the Deutsche Bank Collection for many years and has had a decisive influence on its reception of abstract currents in contemporary art.

On display are not only drawings and photographs—as in the two previous exhibitions from the Deutsche Bank Collection—but also, for the first time, significant paintings and prints. Including the latter medium is particularly appropriate, inasmuch as screen printing with its industrial, anonymous color surfaces is the ideal technique for implementing constructive or concrete pictorial ideas. The series works on exhibit are also in line with this theme, with geometric variations as well as changing perspectives and color schemes.

Like the Deutsche Bank Collection itself, Ways of Seeing Abstraction has a global orientation, featuring internationally renowned artists such as Gerhard Richter and Tadaaki Kuwayama, as well as a number of new discoveries and rediscoveries, including Rana Begum, Jennie C. Jones, Kapwani Kiwanga, and Wilhelm Müller. A total of 47 artists from 12 countries are represented.

The exhibition deliberately dispenses with categorizations such as Constructivism, Abstract Expressionism, Informel, Hard Edge, Concrete Art, and Neo Geo. It shows how younger generations of artists, in particular, not only use elements of these now historic styles as a reservoir of forms, but also reinterpret them and combine them with current, even political content.

Artists in the exhibition:

Markus Amm, Rana Begum, Otto Boll, Kerstin Brätsch, Cabrita, Ernst Caramelle, Carlos Cruz-Diez, Adriana Czernin, Helmut Federle, Günther Förg, Günter Fruhtrunk, Franziska Furter, Rupprecht Geiger, Katharina Grosse, Bernhard Härtter, Erwin Heerich, Daniel Hunziker, Olav Christopher Jenssen, Jennie C.
